- 1. (S/NF/SK) The target was a railway station classification yard and refitting shop complex in the Soviet Union. This facility was located in a medium sized industrial town with several known tall smoke stacks of various size and construction materials. The train yards contain numerous lead-in rails, work buildings and switching systems.
- (S/NF/SK) Source had some initial problems with ADL and false labelling perhaps due to the immensity and complexity of the site. Men sitting with their knees and arms crossed became. "statues". A possible tarpaulin covered rail car became a "covered wagon" on a dusty road. After some frustration on the part of the Source and some stern directions by the Interviewer, the Source "locked-on" to the proper site and began providing much unambiguous data pertaining to the various known gestalts of the site. According to Source the site is, "brown, dirty and rocky (and) contains old vehicles, rounded, hard, parked in the dirt". Men at the site, "wear protective clothing, carry things and enter the vehicles from the side", a possible reference to the actual method used to enter a train car. Inside one of the vehicles Source perceived it as being, "new inside, not as old, panelling, a big area, relaxing, an area for the passengers". The concept of a train was, in the opinion of the Interviewer, expounded upon in a description of a "large vehicle, more square, where the driver sits it's smaller...more modern...big, thick, lumpy...it doesn't drive very fast, much workings inside, bulky, thick slow feeling..." Later Source continued to describe these powerful vehicles as, "...sluggish, slow moving, much fixing, always fixing, weighs tons and tons, levering, powerful when in use, now they're off..." The sound of, "cheee cheee cheee" (like a steam exhaust when stated), was perceived by Source along with smells of, "dirty, oily, fumey and smokey" along with a repeat of the sound, "cheee cheee cheee" now associated with smells.
- 3. (S/NF/SK) The yards themselves were not as definitively reported on by Source who perceived the area as, "rocky, outdoors, brown, dusty, arid with little stones or rocks and no activity...with a large structure near this place." The structure was perceived as, "square, going to a point, thin, tall, squares, not complete..." An accompanying post-session sketch seemed to indicate that Source had perceived one of the surrounding smoke stacks and not one of the yard shops. Other data pertaining to the structures could not be positively attributed to the concepts of yard shops at this site.
